About the Seminar

India is virtually an epitome of biodiversity which has laid a strong foundation in drug discovery from natural products and undoubtedly it is one of the major global leaders in this field. Plant derived drugs constitute major share of different systems of healthcare practiced in India. This conference shall act as a "one-stop-platform" which shall consists of a perfect blend of classical research and modern biology so that strategic approach can be devised in strengthening our research in natural product research. Probably it's now well accepted that nature has the answers in all our sufferings and we just need to dig deep into our traditional medicinal knowledge.

In the current scenario natural products and traditional medicines are blossomed with great importance in terms of its unique diversity of chemical structures and biological activities have made fruitful contributions for development of modern medicine. Since last few decades many research works are on way of divergent approach involving indigenous knowledge with current technology exploring the possible concepts and methodologies from natural products and traditional medicines to explore further for drug discovery. Globally various traditional systems such as Siddha Ayurveda, Unani, Chinese, and many others have been still practiced in many regions and has systematic and orderly regulated systems of medicines to combat various diseases. Researchers adopting modern parameters among various streams can play their sincere role to prevent the loss of this rich traditional knowledge for cost effective and health benefit based efforts. Along with long listed scopes, various other issues such as regulatory approval, patent, proper authentication, systematic documentation is also challenges and difficulties on other hand. Traditional Healers, Baigas and Vanidas of Chhattisgarh State have protected the vast ethnomedical knowledge and are practicing it at the local level. This Seminar would also work as the interface in between the traditional healers and modernizing researchers.
